Beerenauslese

Individual berries are “picked out” in these wines, and only when the vintage is ideal for it. This effort results in more intense, sweet yet balanced, rare wines.

3166	S.A. Prüm, Wehlener Sonnenuhr Vat 18, Mosel 1999	190
3168	Valckenberg Madonna, Rhein, 2003	42

Trockenbeerenauslese

Taking the selection a step further, these wines are made from selected berries, which have been left on the vines a bit longer, allowing them to lose more water content. “Tracken” (dry) berries produce even more intense flavors.

3170	S.A. Prüm, Wehlener Sonnenuhr, Vat 12, Mosel, 2003	250
3174	Kloster, Eberbach Rauenthaler Baiken, Rheingau, 1989	475

Eiswein

“Ice wine” is made from grapes that are picked after frost, so that most of the water in them is frozen. Quickly pressed, these grapes give more sugar, acid and flavor extracts relative to water content, thus producing highly concentrated wines.

3176	Gunderlock, Rheinhessen, 2004	65
3178	Valckenberg, Madonna, Rhein, 2003	60

Spätlese

Breaking up the word, spat means "late" and lese means "picking." Put them together and you have "late picking." That's exactly what the wine is made of, grapes that were picked after normal harvest. The extra days of sun give the wine more ripeness and flavor.

Auslese

Translated as “out picked”. This means that particularly ripe bunches of grapes are selectively picked out from the vines. You probably do the same thing in your own garden if you grow tomatoes; you pick out especially ripe ones and leave the other ones on the vine.
